That sound you hear is Parcells blubbering

By Jacques E. Strap
Action sports analyst

Fans of the Dallas Cowboys—what few there might be left—are certainly getting tired of coach Bill Parcells' querulous, negative, and crybaby demeanor every time he is interviewed on TV by the press.

Big Bill has tits bigger than any cheerleader on either side of the field, and you couldn't cram his bolivian keg ass into a number-3 washtub using a tub expander, but Parcells gets more tube exposure than T.O. and Jerry combined.

Why anyone from around here would support the idea of Parcells, Jones, and the Cowboys holding workouts in the Alamodome is more than I can comprehend. Yet we still have local sports yokels who swoon over the notion. Take KSAT-TV's Gregg Simmons for example. Frog face Greg would probably blow out his tennis shoes and thoroughly wet his crotch for some quality time with Dallas Cowboys water walkers.

Parcells gets defensive with the press because he knows he is not getting the job done in Dallas. He's a New Jersey native who is about as out of place on Texas turf as a real live cowboy on the sidewalks of Manhattan. And when Texas reporters quiz Parcells about his half-baked decisions and unsatisfactory explanations for them, he puff's up like a Gulf Coast blowfish and whines like a Mustang Island coyote.

Parcells' New Jersey ego can't handle the unspoken criticism which comes with such queries. Jerry Jones saddled him with T.O., and Parcells is stuck with the troublesome receiver. And the truth is that he doesn't know what to do about the situation.

As for the benching of Bledsoe, this is another sore spot which may get even more painful as time goes along. Parcells dragged the aging quarterback into the Dallas fold, and his galloping ego has kept him from making a change at quarterback until it may be too late to salvage the season.

Following the Cowboys' uncharacteristic win over Washington, Parcells uttered one line on television which was probably the most sensible, honest, and humble comment to escape his mouth in many a moon:

"I just wish my team would play better football," he blubbered.

4 Action Magazine, November 2006
If the televised debate among governor candidates did nothing else, it revealed the ignorance and hackneyed political mindset of Carole Keeton Strayhorn.

Kinky Friedman held his own while Gov. Rick Perry and Democratic candidate Chris Bell came across like the slick insurance salesmen they both resemble.

But Strayhorn climbed into the toilet and flushed herself down, much to the delight of Texans who are sick of the guinea gable emanating from Grandma's mouth hole.

Carole Strayhorn never answered a question directed her way. Each time one of the panelists asked her something, Grandma gushed out a river of political rhetoric that didn't stop until the debate moderator cut her off.

Waving at airplanes
Swinging her arms with air judo chops and downward strokes like turkey beheadings, Strayhorn might have been killing snakes or waving at airplanes for all the good she did her political future. Even old Joe Strayhorn, the high school sweetie Carole finally got around to marrying, must have been embarrassed by Grandma's pathetic showing on the televised debate.

Already dead, but not quiet stinking, Granny finished cutting her own throat when a panelist furnished the answer, Felipe Calderon, Grandma just stood there, grinning like a simpering idiot who should have stayed home with her grandchildren.

Bell's pussy colors
To Chris Bell's credit, he correctly answered "1836" when asked what year the battle of the Alamo was fought. But that's about all he accomplished. Bell looks more like a cub scout master than a governor, and one can't help but wonder what color lace he might wear on his jockey shorts. And following the debate, Bell really showed his pussy colors by asking Kinky to withdraw from the race. Saying he heard that Friedman was "tired of running" was a forked-tongue lie and just another political cheap shot by the democrat who is obviously scared shitless.

The governor was his old oleginous self, dripping with oily rhetoric about humongous tax cuts, teacher pay raises which haven't amounted to squat, and the hated Trans-Texas Corridor concept which Perry insists upon defending.

Nobody in their right mind would buy a used car from Rick Perry.

Kinky Friedman stuck with the guns he has manned since he announced his candidacy. And while he showed genuine anger when Perry and other candidates tried to portray him as a racist, nobody can condemn Friedman for blowing his cool.

He had a right to be angry simply because he is no racist. He was unjustly accused by Rick Perry and others. And anger might just be a God-given emotion. Kinky promises in his TV commercials to be a "good shepherd" for the state of Texas. And wasn't it the "Good Shepherd" of long ago who kicked the money changers out of the temple while in a high state of urination?

Nowhere in the debate did Kinky foot-shoot himself. He has said from the outset that he would like to see Willie Nelson head of the state energy department. When a panelist tried to use Nelson's recent marijuana bust against Friedman, Kinky came out smelling no worse for the encounter.

Dope no issue
"I didn't say (Willie) should be head of the board of education," Friedman said. "I was talking about the energy commission."

A big plank in the Friedman platform is a proposition to legalize small amounts of marijuana so more jail space would be available for the thugs and crackheads who roam the streets of Houston. And while Kinky didn't try to horn in on Nelson's post-bust thunder, let it be said that Willie, too, has a rich sense of humor.

In event you haven't already heard, Nelson's alleged reaction to his recent marijuana bust was: "I'm glad it wasn't spinach or I would be dead by now."

What was refreshing about Friedman, he didn't come across as a politician, and his definition of the other candidates made headlines all across the state.

Blood-sucking parasites
Noting that the other candidates had a total of 89 political years between them, Kinky defined politics in his inimitable style: "Poly means more than one, and ticks are blood-sucking parasites."

The daily newspaper pundits have been picking Perry for re-election from the beginning, although the majority of Texans want slick Rick out of office. And Carole Keeton Strayhorn, the current state comptroller, has tried to project the race as a two-person affair between herself and the governor.

That ain't the way it is. Strayhorn will finish a distant fourth behind Friedman, Perry, and Bell, and this could damn well be the endgate order if the great unknown bloc of voters comes Kinky's way as many of us expect.

Grandma blew out her bloomers on the debate, and the Kinkster should pick up an additional sackful of votes which might have gone Strayhorn's way.

November 7 is almost upon us, and there is little more to do but get out and vote for Kinky.
S.A. version of 'Tupelo, Mississippi Flash'

By Sam Kindrick

The San Antonio music community is beginning to buzz over a teenage guitar phenomenon known as Will Owen-Gage.

A prodigy who was listening to Hendrix when he was 3, Owen-Gage received his first guitar at age 4. And while it's hard to rate musicians who demonstrate mind-boggling musical talent before the cradle has been permanently moved out into the garage, we feel confident in saying that this kid is a live one worth watching.

At age 19 (his birthday was October 22), Will Owen-Gage is a lefthander who smokes an electric guitar with blazing runs which evoke fond memories of the late Stevie Ray Vaughan and other guitar wizards before him, from T-Bone Walker to Guitar Slim and many in between.

Stevie Ray? Yeah, Will could be another one. And we all love to conjure up visions of Jerry Reed’s incomparable Barefoot Rippy, the Tupelo, Mississippi Flash who had everyone calling him “Sir” and serving on his payroll before his rocket ship to national fame and fortune had finished its imaginary flight.

None of us will ever know just how many potential Barefoot Rippets might be out there, hiding in bedrooms and wringing unnatural sounds from cheap Wal-Mart guitars in the backs of garages.

Reed’s imaginary Tupelo, Mississippi Flash could have been a guitar-picking Elvis in disguise, or he could have been the mythical dream of every Will Owen-Gage who ever picked up an electric guitar and began to feel music in the strings.

Owen-Gage doesn’t look like a Barefoot Rippy, and he doesn’t act like one either. He is a polite and humble kid who was raised by a schoolteacher mother and inspired and encouraged by a Kentucky bluegrass-playing father who stays in close contact with the son even today.

Owen-Gage frightens older musicians who have spent their adult lives trying to master the guitar. But that’s not his fault. And it’s no fault of Will’s that he was dismissed from the old Pensk School of Music here simply because he knew more than the guitar instructor.

“I was doing all the homework exercises the instructor gave me,” Owen-Gage said, “but at the same time, I was fooling around with some Jim Hendrix and Stevie Ray Vaughan material on the side just to keep from getting bored. The guitar teacher finally told me to leave the school. He said I already knew more than he could teach me.”

Born in Louisville, Kentucky and raised in San Antonio where he attended junior school in Alamo Heights and graduated this past spring from Robert E. Lee High School, Will explains his hyphenated double surname.

“My father’s name is John Gage,” Will said. “My mom’s name is Susan, and Owen is her family name. I am very close to them both, and I have always used both surnames. But I am thinking about dropping the hyphen.”

Some of the kid musicians around San Antonio may (or may not) realize extent of the enormous guitar talents demonstrated by Will Owen-Gage when he was a 13-year-old playing with the first version of a band known as the Krybabys. The last version of the Krybabys, which also included Niko Laven on drums and Tyler Phillips on bass, appeared a couple of years ago at The Cove, and it was here that Will’s blazing guitar runs first started drawing rapt attention from adult members of the musical community and music fans alike.

Since the Krybabys days, Owen-Gage has picked with Jim Beal’s group, Miss Neesie and the Earfood Orchestra, and he is currently working with Jay Boy Adams and the Roadhouse Scholars out of Comfort. But it was back at the Cove where I first heard the guitar sound that stopped me in my tracks.

Will Owen-Gage was sitting in that night with the Laven Family, a baby-faced guitar force who carried me back into the 1970s and one sultry summer night when Jimmie Vaughan was playing the late Johnny Goode’s old Village Inn in Hill Country Village.

I recall Jimmie Vaughan on the Village Inn stage that night, but what really stuck in my memory was the pesky kid who was following me around the club and saying stuff like, “Hey, man, why don’t you write something about me. I can play guitar as well as my big brother. I really can.”

That was my first encounter with the now-legendary Stevie Ray Vaughan, and I have always regretted not writing a single word about Stevie Ray until he was already an established headliner with his Double Trouble group.

When I heard Will Owen-Gage that night at the Cove, I vowed that I wouldn’t make the same mistake again.

“I know a lot of people compare me with Stevie Ray,” Will says, “but that’s only true because I have done some of his stuff from the beginning of my professional play. I have a number of influences—Vaughan, Jimi Hendrix, Albert Collins, Guitar Slim, T-Bone Walker, Chet Atkins, Carl Perkins, and Henry Perez (a.k.a. River City Slim) on the local front. Also Tony Cuellar, another fellow like me. I love all sorts of music, and I have never limited myself by trying to follow any one certain style.”

Also an accomplished drummer and upright bass player, Will has added the mandolin to his musical tool.

Will Owen-Gage picks with mentor Jay Boy Adams.

*• Action Magazine, November 2006
Guitar prodigy Will Owen-Gage says he wants to earn enough money to buy his mom a house.

Wearing a heartfelt smile, Owen-Gage says, "I want to make sure she has the house she always dreamed of."

Owen-Gage has been playing since he was four, and his dad gave him a mandolin. He's now working on guitar as well as vocals, and he's ready to move out of his parents' house. Owen-Gage says he wants to be able to buy his mom the house she always wanted.

"I want to be able to support her," he says. "She's always been there for me, and I want to do the same for her."

Owen-Gage is currently working on his demo album, "The Journey," and he's already received positive feedback from fans. He says he's looking forward to recording more music and sharing it with the world.

"I'm really excited about the future," he says. "I know I still have a lot to learn, but I'm determined to make it happen."

Owen-Gage's dad, John Gage, is a freelance musician who performs with various groups, including Jerry Garcia and The Grateful Dead. His mom, Susan Owen-Gage, is a school teacher and a music enthusiast.

"We're really proud of him," she says. "He's always been a natural talent, and we're just excited to see him succeed."

Kinky’s vote watch

The official Bexar County November 7 election night gathering of Kinky Friedman supporters and campaign workers will be held at Casbeers on Blanco Road.

There will be music by the El Orbits, but most of the evening will be spent in either jubilation or gut-wrenching agony as the election results are posted on television.

The election night gathering was originally scheduled for the El Tropicano Hotel, but Kinky’s campaign people here decided that the soulful music venue would be a more appropriate setting for either a wild victory blowout or a sad wake for a fallen soldier who has captured the hearts of many Texans now to the political scene.

Bulverde blunders

Urban sprawl ruined Bulverde years ago, but the full effects of this city-to-the-country spillout are just now being felt in areas where they hurt the most.

It was hard to believe, but idiots on the Bulverde City Council actually voted to prohibit FFA and 4-H students from raising farm animals on their property in the rural area. These out-of-touch municipal politicians hastily did an about-face under the full effects of this city-to-the-country spillout.

Some faceless defense attorney (we can’t even remember his name) has dared opine that the DA should hang up her legal spurs and pull in her horns, a decision which would be a disservice to all residents of San Antonio and Bexar County.

A former district judge with a reputation for dishing out tough justice when she was on the bench, Reed has proven to be just as effective as a district attorney. And you can bet that her defense lawyer opponent in the upcoming election is only urinating into a stiff breeze.

The defense attorney who says Reed is over the hill and without a heart when it comes to prosecuting those who break the law knows not of which he speaks.

She was a tough judge, and she is a tough DA, but Susan Reed does have the capacity to make merciful decisions when she really feels they are warranted.

We know from experience. The DA will drown her opponent on election day.

be sure to suffer, since Reed is always a favorite participant in the cow chip tossing contest.

A worthy cause

Rudy Tee and the Reno Bops, along with Sunny Ozuna, will play the Cordi-Marian Holiday Dance on Saturday, November 11, at Las Fuentes Hall, 11624 Culebra Road (next to Taft High School).

This is a fundraiser for the Cordi-Marian Capital Campaign, a charity organization.

There will be a raffle, a silent auction, and music from 8 p.m. until 1 a.m. For tickets and more information, call (210) 798-8220.

Vanishing story

We still haven't read or heard a word on the condition of hit-and-run boat driver Robert Corrigan III, the one called Triple who reportedly shot himself in the head as one of his lawyers drove him in Llano for a bond setting.

Corrigan, you will recall, is the young man who received a wrist slap by a Llano judge who assessed 180 days in jail and 10 years deferred adjudication for fleeing the scene after the boat he was piloting caused the drowning death of Laura Putnam in Lake LBJ.

After a recent DWI arrest in Austin, according to the Express and News, Corrigan and his San Antonio attorney were motorizing to Llano where the irate judge was waiting to set a new bond on a motion to set aside the deferred adjudication sentence and impose a stiffer penalty.

The paper reported that Corrigan jumped out of his lawyer's car and shot himself in the head after the two learned by cell phone that the judge was prepared to set a bond of $500,000.

If there has been a word in the paper since that attempted suicide report we haven't seen it. And as far as we know, nothing has appeared on TV newscasts.

The Express and News reported that Corrigan was airlifted from Llano to an Austin hospital where he was in critical condition.

Then nothing more.

It would be interesting to know why the newspaper has suddenly withdrawn from this high-profile story without any words of explanation that we have seen.

If there has been anything printed on this subject, then we probably need to consult an eye specialist immediately or sooner.

Cook, Artist, Picker, & Poet

Karl James Lubbering is a swing man at the popular Cove, a live music venue on Cypress Street which also includes a bar, grill, car wash, and laundry. Known by most Cove workers and customers alike as Karl James, the "swing man" serves as a cook in the Cove kitchen when not picking a guitar and singing either on the Cove stage or outside on the patio where he also sells his modern folk art paintings.

"The Cove," says Lubbering, "is probably the only bar and grill and live music club in San Antonio with a resident cook, artist, and musician all rolled into one."

Lubbering sings solo on the Cove patio, but he fronts a band called Three Guys Walking which plays at other venues around the city. In addition to Lubbering on vocals and guitar, the group includes Bob Ridinger on guitar, Jacinto Lefebre on trumpet, and Sal Guajardo on drums. Guajardo also plays drums with the Laveri Family Band.

Lubbering's brother Paul is a vocalist with a group known as the License Plates, a band that Karl also works with from time to time. Born in Louisiana, and raised in San Antonio by an art professor father, Lubbering said he painted and played music at various Austin clubs from 1991 through 1998.

"Then I came back to San Antonio with the idea of creating an art-music environment which would also enable me to use my culinary skills. The Cove has been the ideal spot."

Karl's father Louis Lubbering teaches art at Incarnate Word High School. He has also taught at Incarnate Word University, UTSA and Trinity.

"My brother Paul and I both started painting at my dad's art studio on the River Walk," Lubbering said. "Known as Lube's Art Studio, it was a family operation which was open from 1978 until 1992."

Karl's mom Marilyn served as her husband's main art model for 25 years.

"My mom shared the influence over my life with my dad and brother," Karl said. "I could never thank my parents enough for all they have done for me."

Lubbering says he once garnered $2,000 for a painting. "I'm around here most every day," Lubbering said. "You can find me on the patio, in the kitchen, and sometimes on the stage."

Braceland doc

Remember Bud Luecke, the Morning Band leader who once regaled crowds at the old Maggies Restaurant back during the 80s and early 90s?

Bud's tune Medina Lake (When the moon comes up over Medina Lake I'll be going down on you) has forever etched his name into local beer joint history. And while he still leads the group Morning in mostly private gathering appearances, Luecke earns his living as a board certified orthodontist for Children and Adults.

But Dr. Percy (Bud) Luecke III (DDS and MSD) still has his heart in the music world as is evidenced by the name of his dental offices on Golden Quail Drive.

He calls his professional digs Braceland. Beware the 'bom' Ken Rodriguez, the Express and News columnist who likes to harp on the naughty brasshats in the police department, says he asked one cop if he should look under the hood of his car for a possible bomb.

Rodriguez is a sort of generic version of Rick Casey who fancies himself some sort of investigative watchdog who receives "big story leaks" from within the cop shop. The truth is that Rodriguez hasn't revealed anything that wasn't already common knowledge within (and without) the police department, and he can rest assured that nobody is going to throw even one firecracker under his car.

Blues Bash

The 9th Annual Blues and Bar-B-Q Fest, produced and sponsored by Gilbert (Big Daddy) Gonzales, will be November 11 at Thirsty's Sports Bar in New Braunfels.

Gonzales, a noted drummer who has played with Stretch Williams, Benny Harp, and numerous other top blues outfits, promotes this show annually through his Big Daddy Buzz Entertainment Group.

For only a $5 cover charge, blues nuts will be treated to music by the Stretch Williams Band, Benny Harp Blues Band, The Texas Saints, Jake and the Money Makers, the Step Aside Band, and John Bandy.

Music will start at 8 p.m. and continue until 1 a.m. Thirsty's Sports Bar is located at 262 W. Jahn Street and Castell Street in New Braunfels.

Nightclub Notes

Greg Mastalerz, leader of the popular rock group Texas Radio, celebrates his birthday in November with at least two nightclub owners where the band plays regularly.

For years, Mastalerz and Texas Radio have headlined Pour House owner Brenda Boswell's Nov. 17 Scorpio Birthday Bash, celebrating both their birthdays. And this year, on Nov. 18, he will take Texas Radio into the Brooks Pub for a dual birthday celebration with Brooks' owner Linda Reese.

Patrons at Tra's Country are going out of their way to bring some Thanksgiving cheer to the needy.

Regulars from the popular northeast side country music venue are collecting turkey donations and money for turkeys which will be presented to various churches who are helping families in need.

now, but he's a real one. Sometimes he will hit 14 notes when two or three would suffice, but he is a true ball of fire. When he gets everything all sorted out, watch out!

A fine lead guitar player in his own right, band leader and vocalist Jay Boy Adams has obviously got his own ego under control. He plays blazing guitar duets with his talented understudy, and introduces Will Owen-Gage as our "smart-alec kid with the hot guitar."

I like the Owen-Gage guitar, and I like the young fellow who picks it.

When asked to define his immediate goals as a guitarist and eventual recording artist, Will answered without hesitation: "I want to make enough money to buy my mom a house. We have always rented, never owning a home of our own. I know that she has always dreamed of owning a house, and I intend to buy her one.

Moe & Joe reunite for Sara Burke medical benefit

Moe Bandy and Joe Stampley headed a weekend benefit last month at Texas Pride Barbecue for Sara Burke, wife of Fiddlin' Frenchie Burke, who is now battling thyroid cancer after undergoing open-heart surgery. The two-day series of country music concerts reportedly raised more than $25,000 for the Sara Burke cause. With tears in his eyes, Frenchie said he could never muster fitting words of thanks to the many who donated their time and money.

Frankly Speaking: Relationships...
She said I couldn’t cut the mustard; So I refused to mow the grass!
She said if you don’t help me; Then you don’t get no ass!
So I got up off the sofa and I met her face to face!
I called it things are so damn bad, then go find yourself another place!
She called me a bastard, and she went and packed a bag!
So I called her a slut, and she said, you make me gag!
Then a hug, a kiss, – I’m sorry for treating you so rude!
And the next thing I remember, we’re on the floor – and nude!
Just another day in paradise, It’s really quite a trip!
But I don’t think I’ll ever understand–
This thing called a relationship!
